

1. Before the horror reaches an American household, Father Merrin is digging up trouble in the Middle East. In which country does he discover an ancient demonic artefact?

2. Twelve-year-old Regan has made a rather unusual imaginary friend, and he's certainly no angel. What nickname does she give the mysterious entity she contacts through a Ouija board?

3. Regan's peaceful nights are becoming a thing of the past. When she climbs into her mother's bed, what frightening experience does she claim has been keeping her awake?

4. Father Damien Karras is struggling with his faith and a hefty dose of guilt. Which member of his family dies while he is away, adding to his emotional turmoil?

5. A houseguest meets a particularly grisly end after being left alone with Regan. Which film director is found dead at the bottom of the steps outside her bedroom window?

6. With doctors running out of explanations, Chris turns to Father Karras for help. What religious ritual does she desperately want performed on her daughter?

7. Father Karras isn't easily convinced by supernatural claims. When he secretly sprinkles ordinary tap water on Regan, pretending it is holy water, how does she react?

8. In one particularly chilling discovery, a desperate plea appears as raised markings on Regan's stomach. What two words form this message?

9. The Church calls in an experienced priest to tackle Regan's possession. Which elderly clergyman is chosen to lead the exorcism?

10. During the terrifying exorcism, the demon knows exactly how to get under Father Karras's skin. Whose voice and appearance does it use to torment him?

11. The battle takes a tragic turn when Father Karras returns to Regan's bedroom and discovers Father Merrin unresponsive. What has caused the elderly priest's death?

12. In a final act of sacrifice, Father Karras persuades the demon to enter his own body, freeing Regan. What does he then do to prevent the evil from harming her again?

1. Before the horror reaches an American household, Father Merrin is digging up trouble in the Middle East. In which country does he discover an ancient demonic artefact?
   A: Iraq

2. Twelve-year-old Regan has made a rather unusual imaginary friend, and he's certainly no angel. What nickname does she give the mysterious entity she contacts through a Ouija board?
   A: Captain Howdy

3. Regan's peaceful nights are becoming a thing of the past. When she climbs into her mother's bed, what frightening experience does she claim has been keeping her awake?
   A: Her bed has been shaking

4. Father Damien Karras is struggling with his faith and a hefty dose of guilt. Which member of his family dies while he is away, adding to his emotional turmoil?
   A: His mother

5. A houseguest meets a particularly grisly end after being left alone with Regan. Which film director is found dead at the bottom of the steps outside her bedroom window?
   A: Burke Dennings

6. With doctors running out of explanations, Chris turns to Father Karras for help. What religious ritual does she desperately want performde on her daughter?
   A: An exorcism

7. Father Karras isn't easily convinced by supernatural claims. When he secretly sprinkles ordinary tap water on Regan, pretending it is holy water, how does she react?
   A: She reacts violently, screaming and recoiling as though it burns her

8. In one particularly chilling discovery, a desperate plea appears as raised markings on Regan's stomach. What two words form this message?
   A: Help me

9. The Church calls in an experienced priest to tackle Regan's possession. Which elderly clergyman is chosen to lead the exorcism?
   A: Father Lankester Merrin

10. During the terrifying exorcism, the demon knows exactly how to get under Father Karras's skin. Whose voice and appearance does it use to torment him?
    A: His dead mother

11. The battle takes a tragic turn when Father Karras returns to Regan's bedroom and discovers Father Merrin unresponsive. What has caused the elderly priest's death?
    A: A heart attack

12. In a final act of sacrifice, Father Karras persuades the demon to enter his own body, freeing Regan. What does he then do to prevent the evil from harming her again?
    A: Throws himself through the bedroom window, falling down the stone steps to his death

ONE FOR THE BAR!

- The story was inspired by reports of an exorcism performed on a young boy in 1949. The case attracted considerable attention, although the supernatural claims have never been independently established. Apparently, troublesome teenagers were making headlines long before TikTok existed!
- The bedroom set was refrigerated to below freezing so the actors' breath would be visible on camera. It certainly saved the special-effects department some work, although the cast probably wished someone would turn the central heating up!
- The steep steps featured in the film's dramatic ending are in Georgetown, Washington, D.C. They've since become a famous tourist attraction. Not exactly somewhere you'd fancy taking a tumble after a few pints!
- The possessed Regan's disturbing voice was performed by Mercedes McCambridge, who used harsh vocal techniques to create its frightening sound. Proof that sometimes the scariest special effect is simply a very talented person with a microphone!
- When Regan projectile-vomits over Father Karras, the special-effects equipment reportedly misfired, hitting actor Jason Miller directly in the face instead of the chest. His disgusted reaction was genuine. That's one way to find out you should have called in sick!
- A fire destroyed much of the house set during production, delaying filming by several weeks. Fortunately, Regan's bedroom survived. Apparently, even the flames knew better than to go in there!
- The sound-effects team recorded dogs, pigs and even a trapped bee to help create the film's disturbing noises. Who needs an orchestra when you've got a farmyard full of nightmares?
- Contemporary reports described cinemagoers fainting and vomiting during screenings. Most horror films leave you wanting popcorn; this one apparently left some people needing a sick bag!
- The 74 stone steps in Georgetown were originally known as the M Street steps. They became so closely associated with the film that they're now widely called the Exorcist Steps. Not bad publicity for a staircase, although it's hardly an advertisement for health and safety!
- Despite its shocking subject matter, the film earned ten Academy Award nominations and won two, for Best Adapted Screenplay and Best Sound. Even Hollywood couldn't deny that the Devil had put in a decent shift!