

SEASON 1 (2011)

Question	Answer	Did You Know?
What supernatural creatures attack the Night's Watch in the North?	White Walkers	✂️ The original unaired pilot was so poorly received that large portions were reshoot and some actors recast — including Daenerys, originally played by Tamzin Merchant. 🐺 Real Northern Inuit dogs were used to portray the Stark children's direwolves, helping ground the fantasy elements in realism. 👑 Sean Bean (Ned Stark) insisted on using his real accent (Sheffield, Yorkshire), which later influenced the accents of the entire Stark family. 🏰 The Wall was inspired by Hadrian's Wall in northern England, which George R.R. Martin visited and imagined a vast ice wall in its place. 🍝 Emilia Clarke (Daenerys) ate a fake horse heart made of solidified jam and pasta during her infamous scene — and ended up vomiting between takes. 📺 The phrase "Winter is Coming" became the series' most iconic line, used to foreshadow long-term dangers — both political and supernatural. 🔪 Charles Dance (Tywin Lannister) learned to skin a real deer on camera in one take during his first scene, shocking the crew with his dedication.

 The castle Winterfell was filmed primarily at Castle Ward in Northern Ireland, heavily modified with CGI for towers and battlements.

 Over 200 sets were built across Northern Ireland, Scotland, and Malta for Season 1 alone.

 The dragon eggs gifted to Daenerys were later repurposed as props for another HBO hit — The Witcher.

 Jack Gleeson (Joffrey) received widespread hate for his performance — but George R.R. Martin wrote him a letter praising him for being "too good" at being hated.

 The character of Maester Aemon, played by Peter Vaughan, was blind in real life — just like his character.

 Sophie Turner (Sansa Stark) adopted her direwolf, Lady (played by a dog named Zunni), after filming ended.

 The Dothraki language was created from scratch by linguist David J. Peterson, featuring over 3,000 words by the end of the series.

 The sword "Ice," Ned Stark's greatsword, was made of resin and aluminum for safety, but a real steel version was also created for close-ups.

 Maisie Williams (Arya) had never acted professionally before landing her role at age 12.

📖 Season 1 adapts the entirety of A Game of Thrones, the first book in George R.R. Martin's A Song of Ice and Fire series.

🐎 Jason Momoa (Drogo) won his audition by performing a haka — a traditional Māori war dance — to show the character's intensity.

🏰 The very first scene shot for the entire series was the prologue north of the Wall with the White Walkers.

🐎 Jason Momoa had to learn to ride a horse for his role as Khal Drogo — despite looking natural, it was his first time on horseback.

🔪 Ned Stark's execution was one of the most shocking moments in TV history — many viewers expected him to survive because he was the main star.

🧠 George R.R. Martin was a writer on Season 1 and penned Episode 8, "The Pointy End" himself.

👑 The Iron Throne was made of resin and fiberglass, not real swords — though Martin described it as much larger and more grotesque in the books.

💀 The wight attack in Castle Black was inspired by horror films, with prosthetics and practical effects dominating the sequence.

🐺 The direwolves' names — like Ghost, Nymeria, and Summer — were pulled directly from Westerosi history and old legends in the books.

Why does Robert leave Ned in charge?	Robert goes on a hunting trip

 Many background extras were local hires from Northern Ireland, which helped ground the gritty, grounded tone of the North.

 Arya's sword "Needle" was modeled on a 17th-century Italian rapier, designed to suit Maisie Williams' small stature and fencing style.

 The execution scene in Episode 1 used real chickens and a fake head on a body double for close-up shots.

 The haunting main theme was composed by Ramin Djawadi in under 10 days — it became instantly iconic.

 The Dothraki culture drew inspiration from Mongolian and Bedouin tribes, blending nomadic warrior traditions into something unique.

 Emilia Clarke had two days to prepare for the role of Daenerys after the original actress was recast and the pilot reshot.

 Iain Glen (Ser Jorah) had to hide his Scottish accent and adopt a refined Westerosi tone — a mix of British and medieval diction.

 The Wall was created using a combination of a Northern Ireland quarry and digital matte painting to make it seem 700 feet tall.

 George R.R. Martin gave the showrunners one condition: if the show caught up with the books, they must know how the story ends.

 The book "A Song of Ice and Fire" appears on-screen in Maester Luwin's quarters as an homage to George R.R. Martin.

 The costume department made over 40 cloaks for the Night's Watch to use across multiple extras in different scenes.

 The coffin in Ned's tomb was built to exact dimensions so it could accommodate both actor and prop seamlessly during the funeral scene.

 Emilia Clarke had to shave her eyebrows partially to develop Daenerys's unique forehead crease.

 Peter Dinklage's costume included a secret pouch to stash his WINE between takes—his own personal "vintage!"

 The stag antler helmet Jon Arryn wears in his flashback scene was crafted from real deer antlers by the props team.

 The Red Keep's throne room set was built on a 168-foot-long soundstage at Titanic Studios in Belfast.

 The bricks used in Winterfell's courtyard were hand-carved from foam to look aged while keeping weight low for actors.

 The handwriting for letters (like Cersei's note) was done by a calligrapher consultant to reflect Westerosi script.

The surviving Night's Watchmen, including Samwell Tarly and Jeor Mormont	🔴 The Red Wedding was inspired by real events. George R.R. Martin based the Red Wedding on two historical events: the Black Dinner of 1440 and the Glencoe Massacre of 1692 in Scotland. 🎬 Even the actors were traumatized filming the Red Wedding. The emotional intensity of the Red Wedding scene left both cast and crew deeply shaken—many cried on set during filming. 🐉 The dragons grew—literally. Daenerys's dragons were significantly updated with new CGI models to reflect their growth and increasing threat in Season 3. 🗡️ The sword fight between Jaime and Brienne was completely real. Both actors, Nikolaj Coster-Waldau and Gwendoline Christie, performed their own stunts for the Riverlands duel scene. 🐻 A real bear was used in the bear pit scene. The bear in Brienne's infamous pit fight was a trained Hollywood bear named Bart the Bear II. The scene was filmed in Los Angeles and edited with footage from the Northern Irish set. 📖 Season 3 only covers part of the third book. The season adapts roughly the first half of A Storm of Swords, with the Red Wedding being its climactic moment.

👁️ The prophecy of Arya's eyes was a major teaser. Melisandre's line about Arya closing "brown eyes, green eyes, and blue eyes" would echo into future seasons, hinting at her major kills—including the Night King.

👗 Sansa's wedding dress was full of symbolism. The embroidery on Sansa's dress when marrying Tyrion features fish (for House Tully), lions (for House Lannister), and a dark vine creeping up—symbolizing her entrapment.

🔥 Dracarys wasn't just a cool word—it was Valyrian. "Dracarys," the word Daenerys uses to command her dragons to breathe fire, is High Valyrian for "dragonfire." It became one of the most iconic phrases in the series.

💔 The "Mhysa" ending was controversial. While Daenerys being hailed as "Mhysa" (Mother) was visually powerful, some viewers and critics saw the scene as an example of the "white savior" trope.

👶 Gilly names her baby in the books, but not yet in the show. In the books, she names her son after Sam. In Season 3 of the show, the child remains unnamed and simply referred to as "her baby."

💀 Rains of Castamere was your warning. The ominous song played just before the Red Wedding

🔴 Arya's storyline in Braavos was criticized by some fans, leading to a rewrite of her escape arc. Producers toned down certain action scenes to make her survival more grounded.

💡 The candle-lighting and visual design of Cersei's coronation were inspired by classic film noir and gothic coronation paintings, meant to show her as both powerful and ominous.

🏹 The Battle of the Bastards was choreographed like a real historical cavalry battle. Horses never physically collided on set—trainers used careful spacing and editing to simulate chaos.

👤 Jon Snow's true parentage reveal included one of the most-discussed transitions in the series: a baby's face fading into Jon's adult face—sealing the R+L=J theory visually.

👤 Benjen Stark's half-dead form is based on a book character called "Coldhands," though the showrunners avoided naming him to leave some mystery for book readers.

📖 Samwell's arrival at the Citadel was designed to resemble Harry Potter's Hogwarts—complete with soaring towers, grand libraries, and a sense of academic wonder.
