One For The Bar!

Johnny Depp drew inspiration from Rolling Stones guitarist Keith Richards when developing Jack Sparrow's mannerisms. Richards later appeared as Captain Teague.

The entire film series was inspired by the Pirates of the Caribbean theme park attraction, which first opened at Disneyland in 1967.

Davy Jones's tentacles were designed to move in ways that reflected his mood rather than simply wriggling randomly.

The famous runaway water-wheel sequence in Dead Man's Chest was filmed partly on the Caribbean island of Dominica.

The visual-effects artists behind the ghost sharks studied real shark movement to make the supernatural creatures feel convincing.

Dead Man's Chest and On Stranger Tides each passed $1 billion at the worldwide box office, making the series one of cinema's biggest adventure franchises.

Chow Yun-fat joined the third film as pirate lord Sao Feng, adding one of international cinema's biggest stars to the cast.

The visual effects of Dead Man's Chest won the Academy Award for Best Visual Effects.

Twenty-two synchronised swimmers helped create the underwater mermaid sequences in On Stranger Tides.

Bill Nighy's performance as Davy Jones became a major breakthrough in on-set performance capture technology.

Disney executives were initially unsure about Johnny Depp's eccentric portrayal of Jack Sparrow.

Orlando Bloom reportedly needed around fifteen takes to successfully perform the sword flip when Will presents Norrington's new sword.
