ONE FOR THE BAR!

Although several dolphins played Flipper, the best known was a female dolphin named Kathy, even though Flipper was portrayed as male

P. T. Barnum's purchase of Jumbo caused public outrage in Britain, and the giant elephant later became one of the biggest attractions in Barnum & Bailey Circus

Although Lassie was always a female character, nearly every on-screen Lassie has been played by a male rough collie, as males keep a fuller coat year-round

Charlotte's Web was inspired by author E. B. White watching a spider save flies in his barn while raising a sick pig

Judy Hopps is the first rabbit police officer in the city of Zootopia, despite everyone telling her it couldn't be done

Bolt was one of Miley Cyrus's first major film roles while she was at the height of her Hannah Montana fame

To prepare for Zookeeper, Kevin James spent time observing real zookeepers to learn how they interacted with animals

Clifford was created using CGI, with the filmmakers making him around 10 feet tall to match the beloved children's books

Although Rocket looks like a raccoon, he insists he's not one—and the films never officially identify his species

Aragog was portrayed using a combination of a huge practical animatronic spider and CGI effects to bring the giant Acromantula to life

The filmmakers chose a red panda because its fluffy appearance perfectly matched the film's themes of awkward teenage emotions

Real penguins were used alongside CGI in Mr. Popper's Penguins, with Jim Carrey reportedly becoming very fond of his feathered co-stars
